

AUGUST 2020

As homeworking becomes part of the normal working life for many Virtual Live training is now an important way to train as it connects individuals and teams. Home workers experience much needed interaction with colleagues, or members of an open group which adds further interest to the learning. This interaction provides a sense of worth and sharing which are both major benefiteres to the Emotional and Wellbeing of the individual and team.

This last month we have also seen the requirement for return to classroom training to accommodate, and in appreciation, of candidates different learning styles. We have also been delivering blended learning to combine the strengths of both traditional “classroom “training and the convenience of “online virtual live training”.
